OOSEVELT WINS PAYN OVER.

HEY TALK FACE TO FACE AND BURY THE HATCHET.

yn Didn't Like the Old Rossevelt, but the New One is an "Able Statesman," Whom He'll Support—Republicans Free to Choose Candidate for Governor.

WASHINGTON, June 30.-After having nies for more than twenty years, ident Roosevelt and Louis F. Payn made it up to-day in a personal interview; at least Mr. Payn gave assurances that he would let bygones be bygones and would take off his coat and work for a Roosevelt victory in New York State and Mr. Roosevelt expressed himself as grateful.

There was pretty free talk on both sides and Mr. Payn had an opportunity to explain that his opposition to Mr. Roosevelt had dated away back beyond the recent time when Mr. Roosevelt, then Governor, of Insurance for the State of New York; dated back, in fact, more than twenty years when Mr. Roosevelt entered the State Assembly and declared that he would think and act without reference to the party

In the course of the interview Mr. Roosewelt made it known that he intended to take no part in the selection of a candidate for Governor by the New York State Republican convention.

When Mr. Payn got here last night he said that he was in Washington because the President had asked him to come. It was said authoritatively to-day that the President had not invited Mr. Payn, and to this statement was added the explanation that in response to repeated suggestions by personal friends that the so called anti-Roosevelt Republicans in New York, inbluding Mr. Payn, be asked to visit him to talk things over, Mr. Roosevelt had replied that he could not ask any one to come, but that any loyal Republican who desired to see him would be welcome.

Leaving out of the question, however whether Mr. Payn was or was not invited to the White House by the President, the fact remains that Mr. Payn, just as he said he would last night, called at the Executive offices at 10 o'clock this morning and was received by the President after a wait of a few minutes only, while Mr. Roosevelt was having a conversation with George B. Cortelyou, who retired from the Cabinet to-day preparatory to assuming the duties of chairman of the Republican national committee to-morrow.

Mr. Payn was dressed for the occasion. He wore a new black English walking coat, very light trousers, patent leather shoes, vest, pink cravat and broad-brimmed white straw hat. When he entered the President's office he wore silk thread gloves of a lavender shade. When he emerged his hands were bare, save for the huge diamond ring that is always with him.

In spite of their avowed dislike for each other, the meeting between the President and Mr. Payn was not marked by any embarrassment. They had a heart to heart talk that left no doubt of Mr. Payn's loyalty, and apparently both felt better for it.

After the interview, which lasted about an hour, Mr. Payn said some interesting things for publication.

"I came here as a Republican having the interest of the party in the State at heart," said Mr. Payn. "The President wanted to know what the situation was in New York. I told him that everything was looking first rate and the party in the State, so far as he was concerned, was united. The men in the State who have been known as anti-Roosevelt men will go into the canvass and do as much for him and the ticket as his most ardent and lifelong admirers.

"There wasn't anything awkward about the meeting between the President and myself.. You know that Roosevelt is frank and straightforward. It was as free and as frank an interchange of views as I could have had with an intimate friend.

"Yes, we talked over the past. Of course Mr. Roosevelt knew I was for Hanna. Mr. Roosevelt knew, too, that I was for Roose velt for Vice-President in the Philadelphia convention, and he also knew it wasn't for any considerable toye I had for him.

The President didn't ask anything about any particular disaffection in the State. We agreed without mentioning any names that the proper candidate for Governor in the State of New York was the biggest and broadest man to be found who would accept. Beyond that he said what was true, that it wouldn't be proper under any circumstances, and he didn't intend in any way, to interfere with the policy of the party in the State so far as nominations went: that all that, as he expressed it, would have to be left 'to my good friends in New York,' and he added, who are far more capable of making a ticket and of running the canvass than I could possibly be.'

"The President was profuse in his compliments to ex-Gov. Black and full of praise for his speech at the convention placing Mr. Roosevelt in nomination. Yes, we talked in a way about what the St. Louis convention might do, and I told the President that it didn't make much difference who the Democrats nominated. as they were beaten before they started.' It was suggested to Mr. Payn that it seemed somewhat strange that after his long opposition to Mr. Roosevelt he was visiting him. "Yes," Mr. Payn replied. "I have always been opposed to Roosevelt up to the time when there was no opposition to him the national convention and he was made the candidate of my party. I opposed the Mr. Roosevelt that I knew twenty years ago, who was then a boy fresh from college and had no sort of knowledge of politics or the duties of a politician or a statesman. That was the Roosevelt that I had always been opposed to. "I am now for THEODORE ROOSEVELT, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES and the nomines of my party. He is not the Roosevelt of old, but one of the ablest statesmen Sat this country has ever produced." Ar. Payn talked about some other things act connected with his interview with the President, and then he said with much

"Young man, let me give you a piece of advice. Never trust a coward. He may be your most intimate friend, he may love you and admire you, he may be intensely loyal, he may be above reproach in his friendship for you, but don't trust him, for sconer or later he will betray you.

Never put him on the outpost; never put him in a position of responsibility. no matter what his ability may be; for some time or another he will fail you; will so back on you. Roosevelt is no coward, I've fought him for twenty years, and I know him to be a courageous man. He has physical courage and he has moral courage. He'll put up his arms against anybody. Since he has been in the White House he has developed wonderfully, and I regard him as one of the greatest politicians and statesmen in the country.'

When Mr. Payn was asked what would be the effect upon the Republican ticket if Cleveland were nominated at St. Louis,

"Yes, Parker," said Mr. Payn.
Mr. Payn left here on the Congressional imited for New York at 4 o'clock this afternoon. He will spend the night in New York and start back for his home in columbia county to-morrow afternoon. "Six weeks ago," Mr. Payn said, when he got back from Washington last night, "some mutual friends of the President and of myself asked me to run down to Washington to talk over certain matters with Mr. Roosevelt. I refused at that time. stated that after the convention, if Mr Roosevelt should be nominated and should wish to see me, I would go. My visit to the White House was the outcome.

"It is wonderful how offcumstances have helped Mr. Roosevelt along. Four years ago many people thought they had extinguished Mr. Roosevelt when they had him nominated for the Vice-Presidency and you know how it turned out. And now that he has been nominated for the Presidency itself the leaders of the party in this State must work for him, even though they may not be particularly friendly to him, because many of them want to elect their Assemblymen and Senators, and then again there is a United States Senator to be elected this year. Therefore we cannot afford to have factional differences in the State.

"Although Mr. Roosevelt is still imetuous and goes straight for the bull's eye, I found that in the five years which have elapsed since I saw him last he has become a very acute and sagacious politician. Although he asked me many questions about conditions in the different parts of the State, I soon learned that he had been well posted, and that he knew as much about those conditions as I did '

VERMONT REPUBLICAN TICKET. C. J. Bell Nominated for Governor-Roose velt's Nomination Declared Wise. MONTPELIER, Vt., June 30 .- The Republican State convention here to-day nominated C. J. Bell of Walden for Governor; C. H. Stearns of Johnson, Lieutenant-Governor;

Stearns of Johnson, Lieutenant-Governor; F. G. Gleetwood of Morrisville, Secretary of State; H. F. Graham of Craftsbury, State Auditor, and John L. Bacon of White River Junction, State Treasurer.

Among other things the platform declares that in the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt to be the twenty-sixth President of the United States, "we recognize that the same careful selection and wise choice that has heretofore so abundantly and successfully appealed to the courage and patriotism and the devotion of Republicans throughout our land, and believe by his election the continued prosperity of the people of the whole United States, irrespective of creed, color or political affiliations, will be assured."

The platform also recommends a further two years trial of the license law after it shall have been amended, and recommends creating the office of Attorney-General.

WASHINGTON PORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW

SWALLOW LEADS THE TICKET OF PROBIBITIONISTS.

Gen. Miles Declined the Honor and the Harrisburg Clergyman is Nom

for President-George W. Carroll of Texas Felected for Second Place. INDIANA POLIS, June 30 .- Gen. Miles waves saide the Prohibition nomination for President to-day when a word from him would have secured it by practically a unanimous vote. In fact, he had only to remain silent to have won, but he chose to speak, and his following turned with almost as much unanimity to one of the General's most enthusiastic supporters and he carried everything with a whiri.

The second day's session opened with the Miles stock above par. No word had been received from him, and his silence was construed to mean that he would ac cept the nomination. The anti-Miles faction hald a caucus and determined to place National Chairman Stewart's name before

The men who attended the caucus admitted that they were beaten unless something unforeseen should happen, but as Mr. Stewart had been the most joutspoken opponent of Miles it was thought best to place him before the convention.

Less than two hundred delegates could be counted upon when the members of the caucus had reported, but it was hoped that one of the numerous telegrams sent yesterday had reached the General and that he would send something in reply. The first business of the morning was to dopt a platform. The committee had wrangled nearly all night over a woman's suffrage plank and when it finally adjourned it was the understanding that majority and minority reports would be resented to the convention.

The "Narrow Gauge" faction, which favored a single plank platform, was completely snowed under by the "Broad Gauges" in the platform committee organization, and although the platform committee itself split and two reports were ready for the consideration of the convention this morning, both the majority and minority drafts contained several planks and neither contained any expression for woman suffrage.

There was a hot fight on woman suffrage n the committee sessions last night and t was lost so completely that neither the majority nor minority members permitted t to appear in their declarations.

The platform declares for the prohibition entirely of the liquor traffic, denounce the lack of statesmanship in the Republican and Democratic parties, asserts that the forts to curb the traffic in liquor have not essened its evils, and says that the Democrats and Republicans are engaged in nothing but a wrangle over the pos

These principles are declared to be funda-The impartial enforcement of all aw; the safeguarding of the people's rights by the application of the principles of jusice to all combinations and organizations of capital and labor; the protection of every citizen in every place in all rights guaraneed by law.

The compromise planks declare in favor of placing the tariff question in the hands of a commission, of the election of United States Senators by the people, of the honest administration of the civil service laws and of the recognition of the fact that the right of suffrage should depend upon the mental and moral qualifications of the citizen.

While waiting for the platform committee to report, an unusual scene was enacted in the convention. While singing "Praise God, From Whom All Blessings Flow," and "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," subscriptions were called for. Several persons subscribed $1,000 each, several $500 each, and on down with smaller amounts, nucleus of a campaign fund. Chairman Stewart said that this had proved the banner year in a financial sense, as only $5,000 was raised at the convention in 1896 and

$7,000 in the convention four years ago. Having cleared the deck for action, the Miles men prepared to take the convention by storm, but all at once there was a half and word went from delegate to delegate that the General had refused the nomination. A crowd of excited delegates gathered around John G. Woolley, and he admitted that he had just received a telegram from Gen. Miles. It read: With many thanks for kindness shown. inder the circumstances, I hope you will not present my name to the convention.' Mr. Woolley said that the telegram was decisive so far as he was concerned and that he would not present the General's name. The delegates appeared to think the action of Gen. Miles was due to Stewart's opposition, and all the Miles votes turned at once to Silas C. Swallow of Harrisburg, Pa., and without apparent prearrangement very one fell into line.

His name was presented by W. W. Hague of Pennsylvania, to which State California yielded when the roll was called for nominations. The nomination was seconded by every State called, plenty of opportunity being given for oratory. No other name was presented for the nomination, and Swallow was finally nominated by acclamation. He was almost successful in getting the nomination four years ago.

George W. Carroll of Beaumont, Tex., and I. H. Amos of Connecticut were placed in nomination for the Vice-Presidency and the roll was called. Carroll took the lead at the start, and when the result was announced he had received 626 to 132 for Amos and was declared nominated. A mass meeting was held to-night, at which speeches were made by many of the prominent men of the party. SANTOS DUMONT INDIGNANT.

JUNE ROOSEVELT RALLY THIN.

SO MANY ARDENT REPUBLICANS WERE SOMEWHERE ELSE.

Rush and Roar About It, as ex-Sens tor Thurston Remarked-It's Child's Play to Elect Roosevelt, He Thinks, and He Predicts a Lively Time at St. Louis.

Holding Roosevelt ratifications in June has not been a successful proceeding here. Only a fraction of the Nineteenth district club turned out on Tuesday night and about one-half of the seats in the basement of Cooper Union were filled last night when the Republican Club's mass meeting was called to order by Pratt A. Brown, chairman of the club's campaign committee. When the last speaker finished there were scarcely 500 persons in the hall.

This was the first general ratification neeting held in New York city. There was plenty of hearty applause at every mention of the names of the candidates, but when one of the speakers referred to the Governor of New York there was plenty of silence.

The principal speaker was ex-Senator John M. Thurston of Nebraska. He was rupted by nandolapping and cries of 'Hear' Hear.' There was a loud burst of applause when he said:

"The Republican party has done tolerably well. It has turned the great army of Cleveland beggars into the great army of McKinley kings."

After praising the Republicans for the quiet and orderly manner in which the Chicago convention was conducted, "unaccompanied by contests, or strife, or bluster, or confusion," Mr. Thurston said:

A different scene will be enacted at St. Louis next week. If you call it enthusiasm, there will be enthusiasm there. It will be the enthusiasm of those rival factions who are attempting to knife each other; it will be the enthusiasm of anarchy in the Democratic party; it will be the enthusiasm of Populism against cussedness [laughter]; it will be the enthusiasm of that great demagogue, leader of all demagogues, against the silent man who doesn't know where he is at llaughter].

In that convention Bryan may or may not gogue, leader of all demagogues, against the silent man who doesn't know where he is at [laug hter].

In that convention Bryan may or may not lead them on. I wish he might. Some man like himself may hold the centre of the stage for a time, and people sometimes think that dramatic genius and oratorical speech stand for wisdom and statesmanship, but the glare of the footlights fade before the sunshine of the people's knowledge, and no man can permanently deceive the American people and they will not long follow any false prophet.

The Democratic convention may or may not nominate the man who seeks with his wealth to buy the nomination. It may or may not nominate the man who seeks with his wealth to buy the nomination. It may or may not adopt some of its old platform planks. It may or it may not join in with the Republican party in declaring that everything it stood for in the past was wrong, and attempting, and in the attempt to follow, the Republican party for the right.

But whatever it does, whoever may be its leader, behind him will be the disrupted columns of dissatisfied Democracy in every part of the country, and against them it will be mere child's play for the solid phalanx of Republicanism with united purpose to win a great and triumphant victory. [Applause.]

There are those, but they are mostly Democrats, who seem to think that the great issue in this campaign is that of Roosevelt the man. They insist that he is impetuous. And so he is, But the impetuosity and American courage and pluck and patrictism. [Applause.] They say that he is quick to act, and so he is, when an American right is assailed and an American citizen is wronged. They say they do not know what he is going to do, and t am glad they do not. But there is one thing I know he is going to do, and the sworn in as President of the United States on the 4th of March next. [Applause.]

The only other speaker besides Robert N. Kenyon, who presided, was Charles H.

The only other speaker besides Robert N. Kenyon, who presided, was Charles H. Treat. He devoted his remarks almost entirely to the work of the New York State delegation at Chicago.

HUNDREDS OF SUITS.

Man Who Got 850 in Transfer Case Has Many Imitators.

As a result of the recent decision of the Appellate Division, upholding the judg-ment of the lower court, mulcting the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company in $50 for refusing to grant a transfer from one line to another, a deluge of similar suits has been instituted, over twenty-five a day being begun since the decision hoetile to the company was handed down. Lawyer Luke O'Reilly, who carried the case to the Appellate Court, has already started nearly 400 similar suits against the company, which has decided not to extend the transfer system until the Court of Appeals settle the question.

Miss Mary D. Hall of Mount Vernon was Miss Bergen's maid of honor and her five bridesmaids were her sister, Miss Ottille S. Bergen; Miss S. Aletta Williams, a sister of the bridegroom, and the Misses Elsie L Totten, Frances E. Belcher and Marjorie K. Bacon. Mr. Williams had for his best man his brother, R. Richardson Williams, Jr.

John M. Thurston of Nebraska. He was evidently impressed by the number of empty seats, for he began his speech by saying:

"It is not fitting that a Republican campaign should open with a rush and a roar. The people of this country are so satisfied and so contented, and so sure of what they want, that a Republican campaign will commence and finish in the thought and quiet and the sanctity of the American fireside, where the great problems of citizenship and statemanship are always most safely marked out. We will leave the divided Democracy, with its past Isms and its future indefinite purposes, to stir the animals up and create whatever noise it pleases."

Mr. Thurston then proceeded to deliver an old-fashioned spread eagle stump speech. The autience seemed to like it, and his remarks were frequently interrupted by handclapping and cries of "Heart Hear." There was a loud burst of applause when he said:

"The Republican party has done tolerably well. It has turned the great army of McKinley kings."

FRANKED TO CHICAGO. The Battery Loads the Salliz Family With

who arrived here from Antwerp Tuesday with his wife, six children and only $3 and for whom the Battery cops. Mury and Meyer, took up a collection, was started to make a tour of the world. As it was they had $65 besides their tickets; Hudgins & Dumes, the Ellis Island caterers, had put them up a hamper that will last them a week, and Edd'e Collins, the Battery cabman, drove them up to the Grand Control Station for nothing. The little brood filed Eddie's cab and overflowed somewhat out of the windows. A throng of the windows. out of the windows.
